Life on the High Street for Dickins Hopgood Chidley LLP will carry on but these columns are now taking a well-earned break. Before you stop hearing about our everyday comings and goings I have a few thoughts to share with you after twelve weeks of writing in The Adviser.

What have we learnt? We have learnt that a lot of people read the Adviser and have enjoyed learning a bit more about our practice – thank you for all the kind comments (and for noting that we have tried to be more communicative).

We have also found out that many local residents did not know about the range of services we offer.

So we hope that you have learnt that if you have got any problem (except medical or veterinary!) which you cannot sort out you should come and see us. We are very approachable and always happy to find time on the phone or in the office to discuss with you what we can do to help you. If it is too difficult for you to come to us, we'll come to you at home. We hope you have gained the impression (correctly) that we are basically professional problem solvers and facilitators of the important transactions of life.

If you missed any of these articles, or would like to read one again, they can be found on our website www.dhc-solicitors.co.uk and you'll see that on the website we say "DHC - when friendly legal advice is needed". Now we hope you will appreciate that not only do we say it, but we mean it too.
